Heidi Bartels who suffers from Multiple Sclerosis, knows that she is going to get worse but she searches for her own way to overcome her illness.

SYNOPSIS

Heidi knows that there is no cure for her illness. Therefore she searches for her own way to get her freedom back. She struggles to go about her daily activities such as waking up and getting into her wheelchair from her bed. However, she is able to swim.

With her contrasting lifestyle between above and under the water, she prefers to spend her time in the water because it is the only way for her to feel free.

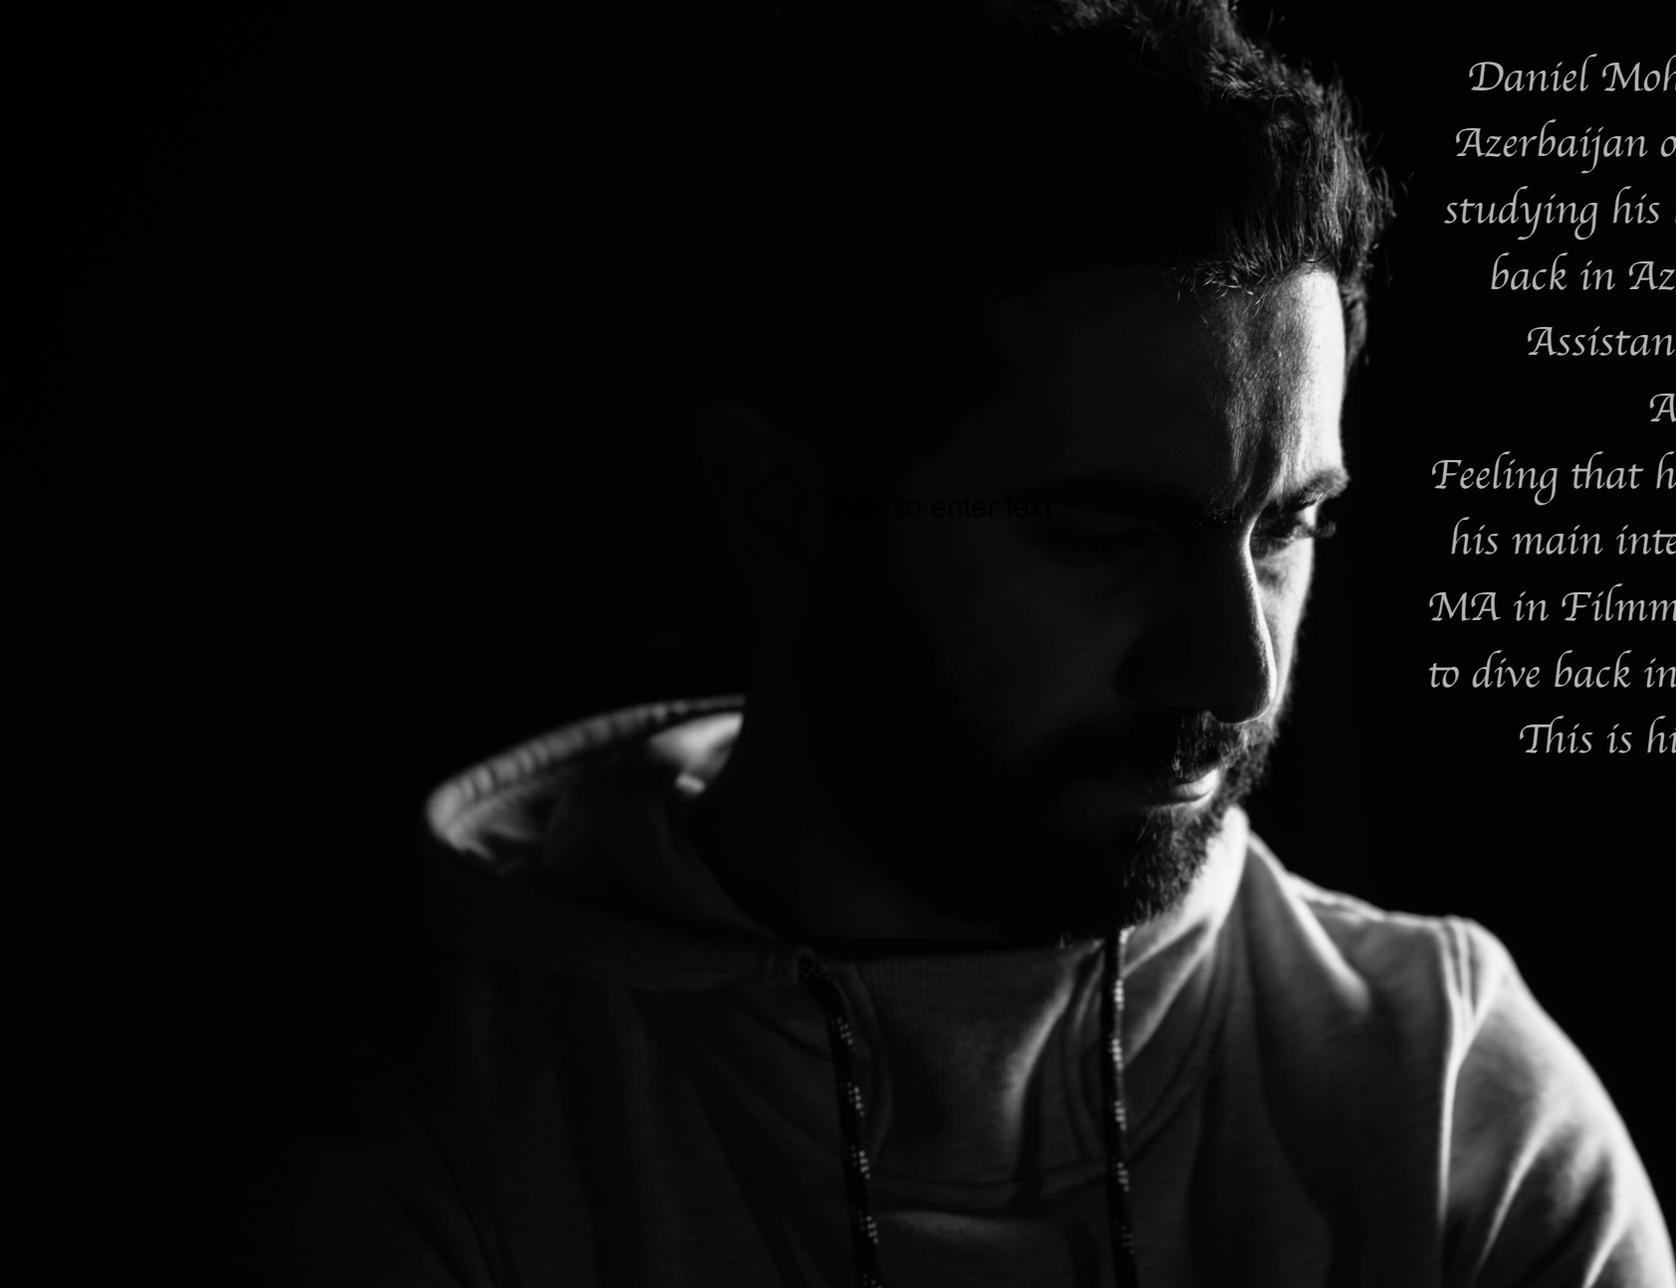

DIRECTOR'S STATEMENT

I was diagnosed with Multiple Sclerosis when I was 20 years old. I couldn't properly walk and control my hands. I was like a prisoner in my own body.

But when I swam under the water I felt myself free. I was intrigued to explore the feeling of getting back your freedom and I knew that there are a lot of people like that in the world. And I couldn't wait to introduce their world to the audience.

My main goal in making Sense Of Freedom is to show the lifestyle contrast of Heidi Bartels who suffers from MS. There are still thousands of people on earth who find their freedom in their own different way. And I wanted to introduce one of them.

Daniel Mohsun Guliyev was born in Baku Azerbaijan on 15th of November 1991. After studying his bachelor degree as a film director back in Azerbaijan, he worked as a First Assistant Director for 2 years in an Advertising Company.

Feeling that his career path was diverging from his main interests in film, he decided to do an MA in Filmmaking at the London Film School to dive back into directing and cinematography. This is his Term 3 documentary film.

A blue-tinted, low-angle shot of a bridge's cables and deck, looking up from below. The image shows a dense network of cables and a central deck structure, all rendered in various shades of blue. The perspective is from directly underneath, looking up towards the top of the frame. The cables are thick and run parallel to each other, creating a strong sense of depth and structure. The overall mood is serene and architectural.
